DIEGO RIVERA RETROSPECTIVE

The Mathematician (1918) by Diego Rivera.

Diego Rivera, Mexico's most celebrated artist, has long been recognized for his achievements as a muralist. He combined the aesthetics and philosophies of Italian Renaissance frescoes, Cubist painting, classical forms and pre-Columbian sculpture with political and social idealism to create a monumental art form which has been considered the only completely original American contribution to the development of modern art.

Until recently, Rivera's overall accomplishments as an artist have been overshadowed by the prominence of his murals. The current exhibit at The Mexican Museum represents a chronology of his work in paintings and drawings. Included are pieces that Rivera considered his most significant, from outstanding examples of his Cubist period to his final painting, "The Watermelons," completed in 1957, the last year of his life.

The Mexican Museum is the final stop in a two-year tour of this retrospective honoring the centennial of the artist's birth. There are forty-seven oils, two drawings and one pastel from the private collection of Señora Dolores Olmedo, art patron and longtime friend of Rivera. Olmedo's holdings represent the single largest concentration of Diego Rivera paintings in the world. Following this exhibit, the paintings and drawings will be returned to Mexico for permanent installation in the renovated facilities of the Dolores Olmedo Foundation in Xochimilco.

In the 1930's Rivera was the most sought-after artist in this country, and his numerous mural projects (with several commissioned in the Bay Area) were critical to his continued development as an artist. But Rivera came to muralism only after twenty years as an easel painter. During his Cubist period alone (1913-1917) he produced over two hundred paintings. Pieces in this exhibit demonstrate the influence of Rivera's studies in Europe and his exposure to Spanish romanticism, Cubism, Impressionism, and the works of El Greco and Cezanne, among others.

After his return to Mexico in 1921, Rivera rediscovered the indigenous roots of Mexican culture, producing a vast number of sketches, oils and watercolors reflecting the country's folklore and folklife. More than any other individual, Diego Rivera was a catalyst for a new Mexican consciousness and identity. Through his art, he elaborated a "new social order," one in which the common man figured prominently and was given heroic status. Mexico honored Rivera by designating him a National Treasure in 1949.

"Diego! Selected Works: 1896-1957" opened on March 30 and continues at The Mexican Museum, Building D at Fort Mason, through July 24. The gallery (and gift shop, La Tienda) hours are Wednesday through Sunday, 12 noon to 5pm. Admission for this exhibit is $4 for adults, $2 for seniors and students, children under 6 admitted free. On the first Wednesday of each month, there is no admission charge, and the gallery and shop remain open until 8pm. For more information, call 441-0445.

DESKTOP PUBLISHING

Many nonprofit groups have been discouraged from even considering the benefits of an in-house computer system. In addition to just plain "computerphobia," they also have serious concerns about the high costs of the initial investment in equipment. Will the results justify the expenditure, in both time and money? Media Alliance, and its offshoot, Computer Alliance, will take a major step towards giving nonprofits access to this technology in a painless and inexpensive way.

The two Fort Mason resident groups will soon open a new desktop publishing lab here at the Center. Designed to serve the nonprofit community, the facility will feature six Macintosh SE computers (with internal 20 megabyte hard disks), an ImageWriter, a LaserWriter, and a modem. The lab will also offer affordable classes in desktop publishing, a software library, and referrals, and will provide a community for support and information. It is expected to open by the beginning of June.

To help community groups make well-informed decisions about the latest technologies, Media Alliance is also sponsoring the second annual Desktop Publishing Conference. Billed as "an affordable day-long conference for community groups, artists, writers, and designers," it will be appropriate for those with intermediate knowledge as well as those who have never even touched a keyboard. One focus of the event will be the pros and cons of bringing the publishing function in-house. If nothing else, participants should leave with a better understanding of the questions that need to be asked, and where to find the answers.

Coordinators hope to differentiate this event from the many other computer shows being offered by separating the special-interest seminars from the vendor fair. This will provide neutral territory, allowing participants to get a better perspective on the whole field of desktop publishing, in addition to receiving information on specific products. The seminars will run throughout the day, presenting leading innovators in the field, covering topics including software tools for graphic designers, page layout for the Mac, designing flyers and newsletters, and book publishing. The keynote speaker will be Susan Gubernat, editor of Publish! At the vendors' fair in Pier 3, there will be free magazines, newsletters, and handouts, plus demonstrations and an opportunity for hands-on practice supervised by experienced volunteers.

The Desktop Publishing Conference takes place on Thursday, May 19, from 8:30am to 5pm, in Pier 3 and Buildings C and E. Advance registration is $60 ($50 for members of Media Alliance/Computer Alliance); at the door, $70 for members and non-members alike. Admission includes a Resource Guide, compiled by Media Alliance, listing over 200 local sources for training, rentals, design, special services, and other computer-related needs.

For information on the Desktop Publishing Conference, the new computer lab, or other services of Media Alliance and Computer Alliance, call 441-2557.

FMC UPDATE: THEATER

Life On The Water presents the world premiere of The Sanctified Church, by Ellen Sebastian, an LOTW co-founder, and Marilyn Waterman, award-winning documentary filmmaker. The play is based on the life of Zora Neale Hurston, a black anthropologist, writer, and folklorist of the 1930's and 40's. The play centers on Hurston's meeting in 1937 with a young white anthropologist who is recording her folksongs and stories for the Library of Congress. In flashback, via Zora's words and incantations, she presents scenes from her childhood in the deep South, and her experiences with voodoo rituals in New Orleans and Haiti. Luisah Teish, who plays Zora, is originally from New Orleans, and practices voodoo in the African tradition, thus bringing a deep understanding to the role. Included in the production are cinematic sound and light devices, rituals, dance elements, and a gospel choir. The play opened on April 8, and continues through May 15, Wednesday through Sunday 8pm, Sunday matinee 3pm. Tickets are $16-$9. For information, call 776-8999.

Ellen Sebastian writes about voodoo and the life of Zora Neale Hurston in The Sanctified Church.

Magic Theatre recently appointed a new Managing Director after a national search to fill the position. Harvey Seifter comes to the Magic after six years as Executive Director of Theater for the New City (TNC) in New York City. As Managing Director, Seifter oversees administrative operations, raises funds, and will periodically direct plays. At TNC, Seifter produced more than 250 new plays and musicals, including "Best New Play" of 1985 and eleven other Obie Award-winning productions. He more than tripled TNC's operating budget, replacing a substantial deficit with a healthy cash surplus and transforming a small experimental company into a major theatrical institution. He also directed several plays, initiated a New Writers Workshop, established the Raw Space and Latin Playwrights Festivals, promoted national and international touring and exchange programs, and commissioned more than twenty-five new plays. Seifter says of his new position, "The Magic has developed and championed an entire generation of American writers and theater artists. Its work has had an historic impact on the American theater. The opportunity to lead the Magic's administrative revitalization and to contribute to its artistic growth is the most exciting challenge of my career."
